"If there is a section of country in Gol's wide-extended creation that can surpass that large scope of country lying between Salt Lake Valley and Carson river for sterility of soil, scarcity of timber, and every thing that has a tendency to cheer up the spirits of the wearied traveller, I am sure that I don't care to see it. From the sink of Humboldt river across the desert to Carson river my heart was sickened at seeing the great destruction of property, viz : wagons, carriages and buggies, dead horses, mules, and cattle, whose carcasses lie thick all over the ground, in a state of preservation, the skins and a good deal of the flesh being dred to the bones-the water, marshes, and air heing so strongly impregnated with alkali that it has a tendency to keep off the devouring insects and birds of prey. But the worst is not half told yet: to see every two or three hundred yards a grave, where a father, mother, brother, or sister has been buried; but ere the train is out of sight the corpse is disinterred by the prowling wolf or the savage Indian-the bones to bleach upon the great American desert. Although I am rather a hardened sinner, yet when I saw the scene all over this broad land. Well, as this is a season of as just described, I could not refrain from shedding leisure, and near the great Southern carnival, Christtears, and feeling myself more submissive to that mighty and powerful God who rules the universe."
